More use of accent colour reduces it effectiveness to guide user

Landing page

Main nav labels don't give clear explanation of exactly how the content will help users

Opening paragraph briefly outlines the content of the site but doesn't go into much detail as to exactly how the content can help subscribers.

Yes its the latest information, but how exactly can it help me?

Cards duplicate the main nav options.

Copy expands on contents of sections but still don't explain clearly how they can help users.

Repeating accent coloured CTAs for every section means there in no hierarchy and no clue as to the most important content on the site

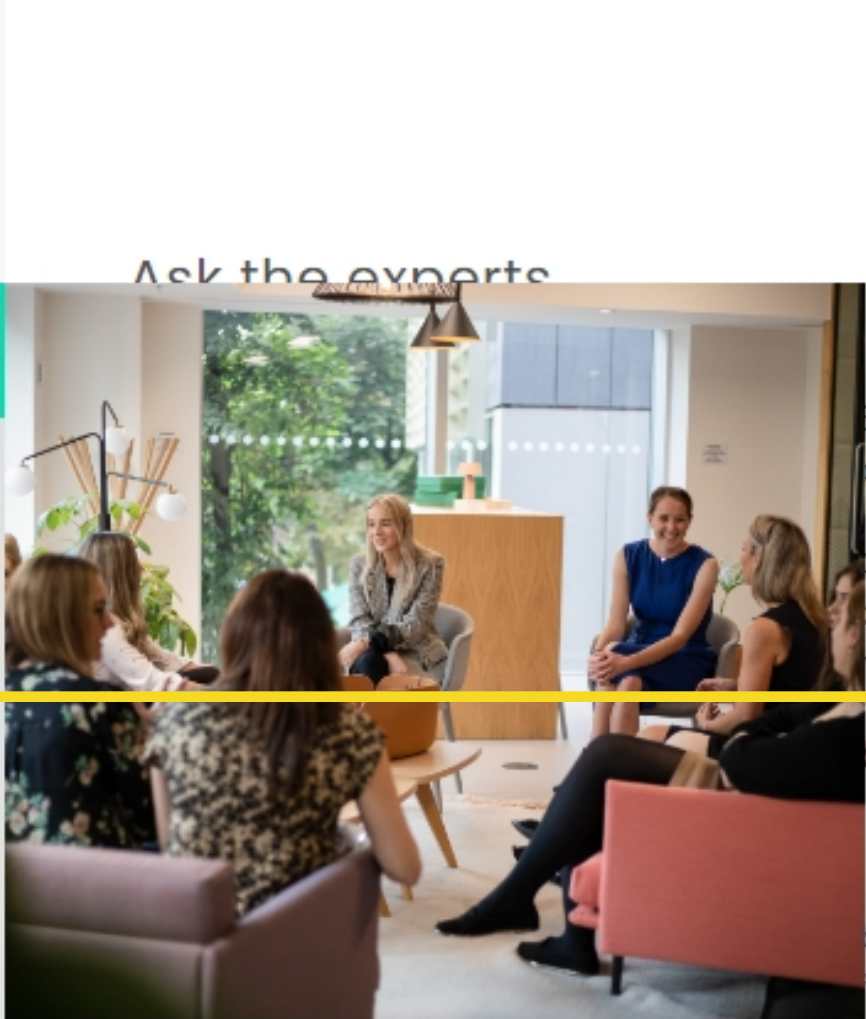

In summary, I'm not entirely sure about exactly how the site can help me,

Its not clear where I should start, or what I am looking for.

Clicking the 'Almanack' reveals further sub-categories that contain content relating to specific types of contentious probate cases.

The IDR founder devised these categories intentionally avoiding legal jargon, and aiming to sort the content into sections relating to the main types of cases they work on.

Cards duplicate these different sections below.

Using the accent colour for the active label text on grey has low contrast reducing visibility and clarity.

Our Transparency Guide

It is really important that clients understand the experience and working methods of the solicitors they instruct. Our Transparency Guide seeks to set out everything you need to know about who we are, how we operate and legal fees. Take a look and compare us to others – we are the only law firm specialising purely in inheritance dispute resolution in the UK.
